

Cost of Credit-Card Fraud Is Set to Shift

Retailers that haven't upgraded systems to accept more secure chip cards to assume risk

"A change that is putting new credit cards in many Americans' wallets will also shift billions of dollars of card-fraud liability to retailers from big banks." - ROBIN SIDEL IN THE WALL STREET JOURNAL ONLINE

Retailers Unprepared for Credit Card Security Deadline

According to Tom Risen, in his Sept 30, 2015 article on the Us News & World Report Web Page.

"U.S. consumers and retailers are widely unprepared ahead of a Thursday October 1st deadline to implement new technology that will change the way Americans do business". "Magnetic strips on credit cards will head for history when RETAILERS – NOT BANKS – will be held responsible for sales fraud if they do not accept new cards with more secure chip technology
